

It's Double or Nothing for everyone now

To be an anarchist means to recognize that our freedom and well-being are inextricably bound up with the freedom and well-being of billions like us. It means discarding all the old excuses for remaining subservient to those who only endeavor to enrich themselves at others' expense. It means becoming fiercely loyal to what is best in ourselves and each other, to our capacity for compassion and cooperation and courage. Across two centuries, anarchists have resisted under monarchies and persisted through dictatorships. Now that liberal democracy and neoliberal capitalism are concluding in a new form of tyranny, a new generation must draw on this long legacy of struggle.

There is no more middle ground.

If you care about public health, you have to become a revolutionary.

If you care about medical research, you have to become a revolutionary.

If you care about climate change,

about labor conditions,

about the well-being of children in warzones,

there is nothing else for it—you have to become a revolutionary.

There is no going back to the way things were,

to the future that we once anticipated.

The old world is in flames around us.

Become an anarchist, or forever hold your peace.
